Following the installation of the new Peruvian Cabinet, the APRA Party followed the usual procedure for testing its attitude toward labor by making many demands throughout the sugar industry. However, on 4 July, the date of the uprising of the southern garrisons, word was apparently issued by the Party headquarters to cease all labor pressure and to stand behind the Government during the crisis. In every case, Aprista labor agitation was halted and the local APRA organs issued statements supporting the Government, the President, and the Constitution.
